Lapis lazuli or lazurite is an opaque half-jewel with an intense azure color. It is not a mineral but a rock because it consists of more than one component. It is mainly produced in Afghanistan. Lapis lazuli is awarded spiritual power by alternative practitioners. Lapis lazuli usually occurs through contact metamorphism in crystalline marble. Lapis lazuli was already known since ancient times. It was in the city of Ur as early as 4000 BC. It was one of the commercial products of the trade between Sumer, Dilmun and Meluhha. It was also very popular in ancient Egypt. It was used, for example, for the death mask of Tutankhamun. There was in the entire Middle East so much in demand that there were already in the 13th century BC. They used lapis lazuli also in ground form as a blue dye (ultramarine), also in the painting of the Renaissance was very popular. Because of many wars in Afghanistan nowadays the gemstone is hard to get.
